

New Left Review

By Perry Anderson, with Wallerstein and Arrighi, even Braudel's History and History of Capitalism with Cornel West, American Idealism

Part I: The Originals

I. History in a Longue Duree

In fact there is history, which commences with the Mediterranean in the 15th century which though in New Left Review commences from the Graeco-Roman empire which then is also Arab history and its form of slavery which was shifted to the major argument from Sirohi - we order the correct world when in fact it follows the schematism - slavery, feudalism and capitalis which is then with unique transitions in the Asiatic mode with feudal-type and tributary modes of production which becomes then the modern capitalist transition which then has in its scope from Cornel West the analysis of what is called race and nationalism, even citizenship and women's identicals all as if it were a cinematic comparison of in fact a history of modes of production, their schematism all of this in a fresco from Sirohi - first the trade ships from British empire which then sweeps through black slaves and people - everyday people - and in fact becomes slave trade in the origins of capitalism which then produces the New World - which is then another film by Mallick on the meditative quality of this beginning of historical capitalism./

II. Cornel West with Sirohi on World-Systems analysis

In fact the broad sweep of history is then also the cinematic sweep of history which captures the history of lived experience as in fact from Sirohi - one scene on unfolding a category, slave trade as in fact a group of black people in a slave trade ship which then transports them from African coasts to England where in fact they are waiting in a cathedral office for the permit to be free.

III. Arrighi and Braudel, even Wallerstein - World-Systems Analysis

In fact the world system is based on Europe first then America and has cycles of financial type which then produces a crisis in this sense which recovers based on historical capitalist dynamics of surplus-extraction which though is also valued in legal systems and international relations of World Bank, IMF and EU which then is also the history of commercial capitalism in India's long maritime trade and such connected histories.
